SECTION 4: THE IDEA

In this section you are being asked to describe the problem that your project or initiative addresses in the city, and how it has responded to it.

Please note that the fields in the submission form have character limits. IMPORTANT: Spaces count towards the character limit. Make sure that your answers are within this limit as text that is above the character limit will not be accepted.

What is the idea and approach of your project or initiative for creating inclusive, climate-ready communities?*

Please use data to illustrate the magnitude of the problem(s) your city faced as much as possible and identify which groups are affected by it. For the idea, include reference to why you chose this approach and whether you adapted an idea from another context/city.

SECTION 5: THE IMPACT

In this section you are being asked to describe the impact that your initiative has had on the problem described in the previous section.

You are encouraged to combine different kinds of evidence sources, including quantitative and qualitative, as available and relevant to strengthen your case: impact studies, user surveys, indicators of environmental, economic, and social impact, press coverage, etc.

When describing your impacts, please state clearly which impacts are directly attributable to the initiative and which impacts are more indirect, or unintentional.

The section prompts you to reflect on different kinds of impacts. You are not required to report impacts in each dimension. There is no minimum threshold of impact for any submission to be considered "transformative".

Please note that the fields in the submission form have character limits. IMPORTANT: Spaces count towards the character limit. Make sure that your answers are within this limit as text that is above the character limit will not be accepted.
